A BLACKNESS ABSOLUTE

BY CAITLIN MARCEAU

Creepy as hell. Utterly addictive and compellingly frightening.

A remarkable ride I cannot recommend enough.
-- Sofia Ajram, author of The Arborglyph

BOOK DETAILS:

A Blackness Absolute is a collection of previously unpublished short horror stories by up-and-coming Canadian author Caitlin Marceau. The collection takes in uncertainties of perception, feelings of vulnerability—to the weather, the natural world, the tenuousness of sanity—and mixes these elements with a strong sense of history and folklore. From the title piece to the final tale, each story layers ambiguities to create an unnerving effect that will get under your skin.

AUTHOR BIO:

CAITLIN MARCEAU is a queer author and lecturer based in Montreal. She holds a Bachelor of Arts in Creative Writing, is an Active Member of the Horror Writers Association. Her other work includes Palimpsest, Magnum Opus, This Is Where We Talk Things Out, and Femina.

PRAISE FOR A BLACKNESS ABSOLUTE:

"Marceau understands the terror that waits in the dark places beyond the seemingly Everyday. Fans will not be disappointed, and new readers will find themselves falling deep into A Blackness Absolute."

-- Laura Keating, author of Agony's Lodestone

"Another dark and desolate collection from a fantastic new talent; Marceau understands how to tap into the root of deep, inescapable fear, and applies it with calculated precision."

-- Lindz McLeod, author of Turducken
